Considering how embarrassed people do get when they assume for the moment the most prominent place it is surprising how well brides and grooms manage to conceal their nervousness. It is very rarely that anything occurs to excite the visibilities of an audience gathered to witness a marriage, and yet a little gathered to witness a marriage, and yet a little born in 1826, and Joseph Wilhelm, born in 1838. nishing an occupation for his three sons: Francis A. At another wedding lately a great crowd was attracted in from the street. The night was dreadfully warm and the ushers' collars were as limp as rags. A woman with a baby girl in her arms came in to see the sight. The little one broke away from the mother and, with a merry laugh, ran down the aisle. THE DREXEL INSTITUTE. Mr. Drexel at one time proposed establishing school for girls, especially the daughters of a school for girls, especially the daughters of clergymen, and for this purpose bought a large property at Wayne, but upon reflection he gave up this plan and stated frankly that he did not think that an institution which should take young women from their own homes would really fit them for future success and happiness in life. He then made a careful examination of the work done by the Cooper Institute in New York, the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, and kindred schools for teaching useful arts and indusdred schools for teaching useful arts and indus-tries, and decided that he would establish an institution of a similar kind on the largest basis and the soundest and broadest foundation. He consulted at every stage his nearest friend, Mr. George W. Childs, and together they went on with their task

The result was the Drexel Institute of Art and Science Industry, opened eighteen months since at 32d and Chestnut streets. Mr. Drexel donated the buildings, which cost $550,000, and further the buildings, which cost $550,000, and further gave it an endowment of $1,000,000. A number of valuable gifts were made to it subsequently. In 1892, at various times, he contributed to the equipment, library and museum of the institute sums amounting to over $60,000. It is especially to give girls and women the opportunity of thus becoming successful workers that Mr. Drexel devoted so large a part of the Drexel Institute to women.

Action. ournals of All Parties Unite in Commen

ing His Decision-Opinions on the Repeal of the Sherman Law. Though there are some differences of opinion as to the measure of responsibility attaching to the Sherman law for the situation which has led to the call for the extra session, editors are quite unanimous in approving the President's action in calling an extra session earlier than September, and seem generally to believe that this action will at once have a good effect through the reassurance it will give. Below are extracts from the editorial comments of a number of leading papers on the "call:" AN ACT OF WISDOM AND COURAGE. From the New York Times.

It is an act at once of wisdom and courage.

pression which has rested upon the country for more than two months, no one can doubt that the uncertainty as to the future of our currency is essentially the result of independent and con-scientious reflection. Like all public acts of the executive, it is in its nature political, and the men who give most attention to what we call politics were not in favor of it. The poli now determined upon by the President is a broad and catholic one. It is not intended, and will not work, for the interest of any section or events which no one can misunderstand that henceforth this country must have and will have a currency as good as the best.

HIS WILD HORSES BROKEN IN.

From the New York Tribune.

Mr. Cleveland has evidently made up his mind that his wild horses to use Gen. Harrison's happy and truthful phrase—are sufficiently well broken in to justify him in mounting the front seat, taking the reins and flourishing his whip. * * Five weeks is a long time in front seat, taking the reins and flourishing his whip. * * Five weeks is a long time in such a condition of things as now prevails throughout the country. Still, the mere fact that a comparatively early date for the extra session has actually been decided upon will have a reassuring and beneficial effect. We presume it may be taken for granted that the repeal of the silver purchase law will be the first thing in order, and trust that it will be ac-complished very shortly after the session opens. A REPEAL WOULD BE A NATIONAL BOON.

From the New York Herald. While the President and his cabinet have for some time realized with the country the necessity of calling an extra session to stop the compulsory purchase of silver, the step taken ves-terday was evidently hastened by the suddenly announced suspension of silver coinage in India, the consequent decline in the price of metal here and the general alarm naturally pro-

From the New York World.

There is a general feeling that the repeal of the mischievous Sherman act will remove a chief cause of the distrust and disturbance The World's canvass some weeks ago showed that a majority of Congress was favorable to repeal. The collapse of the free silver policy in India has completed the demonstration of the failure of this law and added urgency to the call for action. President Cleveland has been led by changed conditions to change has mind and to hasten the meeting of Congress. It is the mark of a wise man and a strong one. Only ools never change. THE SHERMAN LAW NOT THE MOST POTENT CAUSE.

From the Philadelphia Press.

The Press does not believe that the Sherman law is the primary or chief cause of our existing troubles. It recognizes that this measure is in part responsible, and will be heartily glad to see the silver-purchase provision repealed. It is gratified to see an extra session called for this system of the state o to see all our difficulties vanish with the removal of what is not their most potent cause, and while approving the President in assembling Congress it does not hold him blameless for failing to exercise his own powers for the protection of the country against the distr which has wrought incalculable loss.

A TIME TO SINK PARTISAN DIFFERENCES. From the Philadelphia Times.

The call for an extra session early next month will be generally accepted as an assurance that the relief demanded will be obtained, and with this prospect before it the business world can go on through the coming month hopefully, in-stead of faultering in doubt and despair. If the leading men of all parties will but agree meanwhile to sink their partisan differences and units in a common effort for a sound financial policy the present evil will but open the way to greater future prosperity.

LOOKING FOR A BITTER CONTEST. From the Baltimore American.
It must be remembered that the situation which is most serious, will not be relieved immediately after the assembling of Congress. One of the bitterest contests in the body's history will follow the meeting of the two houses, and the silver men, who are able tacticians and orators of enormous staying power, will fight every inch of ground, and will have no mercy on the majority. Under the present rules of the House of Representatives they can talk for-ever, and as their silver mines are closed and every delay is money to them, they will make full use of their opportunities. It will be a sad illustration of the new rules, and business men and patriots will wish for the return of the business methods of the Reed Congress; but as the value of the have made their bed, they must lie in it. I fortunate will the country be if the repear of the Sherman law is reached within two or three months. WILL COMMAND GENERAL APPROBATION.

From the Baltimore Sun.

The President's proclamation calling upon Congress to assemble on Monday, August 7, for congress to assemble on monday, August 7, for action upon "unwise laws which must be executed till repealed" will command general approbation. The distress and impending danger of the present financial situation—forcibly depicted in the proclamation—cannot be ignored. * * * "Ifs" and "buts" under present circumstances are out of place and evince a feeble grasp of the necessities of the situation. No Congressman that looks to a po-litical future can afford in a matter of such passing importance to persist in an indifferent or obstructive attitude. What the country de-mands is immediate relief from a law which trikes at the very roots of business confid A REASSURING CERTAINTY.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

While Congress will not meet for over nonth, still the fact that the proclamation has been issued will tend to allay the uneasy feeling that has prevailed. There is promise of definite action one way or the other shortly, and this is a blessing. It is the uncertainty that is killing.

THE BEST AND WISEST STEP. From the New York Recorder.
It is the best and wisest step that could be taken. We are glad that the national administration has come down to the common sense business of the situation. We are glad that, invested with the responsibility of governing, it assumes the responsibility of government. DEMANDED BY CONSERVATIVE SENTIMENT. From the New York Press.

In the present emergency the repeal of the silver purchase clauses of the Sherman law is demanded by the conservative sentiment of the country. It is extremely doubtful if a majority of the democrats in Congress can be persuaded to vote for this repeal unless they are bribed by the offer of the administration to favor the restoration of state bank currency. The return to wildcat bank notes would be an evil worse even than free silver coinage and should be resultely resisted by every member of the be resolutely resisted by every member of the Officers Elected.

Sickles the dedication address will be made by Bishop Potter. Gov. Flower and Gov. Pattison will then address the veterans, and a poem will be read by De Witt C. Sprague of this city. Hymns and songs by the Kennicott Quartet will then be sung. A salute by a United States battery will conclude It is wise because, whatever other causes have contributed to the severe and prolonged dethe ceremonies.

The third day will be taken up with the completion of the muster rolls of honor and the filing of returns at headquarters for medals.

During the reunion on the battlefield the survivors of the Excelsior Brigade of New York will dedicate their beautiful monument, which stands on Sickles avenue near the peacl orchard. The monument is in the shape of a Doric temple, pentagonal in form, and having on each of its five sides bronze tablets giving the record of the killed, wounded and missing in the battle of each of the five regiments of the brigade. The whole is surmounted with the brigade. The whole is surmounted with a bronze eagle with outstretched wings. The monument is twenty-one feet eight inches in height. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, the organizer of the brigade and its first commander, will preside. W. R. Eastman, late chaplain of the Third Excelsior, will offer prayer, and Col. John N. Coyne of the First Excelsior will deliver the oration.

THOUSANDS OF VETERANS. It is estimated that 40,000 people will participate in the exercises, of which number about 10,000 will be veterans of New York regiments who were in the battle. Among the prominent visitors expected are Gov. Flower of New York, Gov. Pattison of Pennsylvania Bishop Potter, Gen. O. O. Howard, Gen. James Longstreet, Gen. Alexander Shaler, Gen. Gec. S. PLAYING THE FINALS.

Large Number of Spectators on the Bachelors' Club Tennis Grounds. The finals in singles and doubles in the local tennis tournament were played vesterday after noon before the largest audience yet assembled at the courts of the Bachelors' Club.

Geoghegan and Thompson contested for former prize, while Davidson and Woodward were pitted against two young and rising players, Doyle and Gee. The former match was won by Geoghegan, who has shown great strength of play all through the tournament. Thompson dropped three straight sets to the young Capitol Hill prodigy by a score of 6-1, 6-3, 6-3. Thompson has displayed remarkable nerve all through the tournament, and by able nerve all through the tournament, and by dint of hard work has been able to bring himself to the end, winning second prize.

The match between Davidson and Woodward and Gee and Doyle was a foregone considerable metalent the younger element. Doyle holds the junior championship, and his partner, Gee, showed that he possessed considerable merit as a player. They lost the match by a score of 6-1, 6-3, 6-3, the first double prizes going to the well-known and better-equipped players, Davidson and Woodward.

son and Woodward.

The championship match between Davidson and Geoghegan will be played today, and the general opinion is that the former will still retain his title, which he has held so long.

Shields won the consolation prize, defeating Shields won the consolation prize, de Boag after a hard match by 6-2, 4-6, 7-5.

AS TO COAST DEFENSES. the ship; when the impact of the blow is sufficient to effect that object the armor plating pushed in as a mass favors the more immediate.

Some Ideas on the Subject by Rear Admiral OPPORTUNITY FOR RAMS. Ammen.

He Discusses the Criticisms Made on His Vessel, the Katabdin, and Talks Upon Rams and Their Utility.

Written for The Evening Sta

Some twenty years ago the utterly helpless con dition of our fortifications and our navy as a supplementary aid to a satisfactory coast defense attracted my attention and since that time has occupied a considerable part of my time. My first idea was that armored torpedo boats would be found most available as a principal naval arm and most economical, with this proviso, that nothing is economical that will not best fulfill the intended object. Tentative calculations soon convinced me tion with a minimum of armor, that the requisite weight to secure a reasonable immunity from the projectiles of an enemy would make the construction by no means indifferent as a ram. A recent occurrence, as published, is not necessary to destroy by ramming a vessel of whatever displacement. The weight of the ram is the other is the square of the velocity when she strikes, therefore a relatively light weight with a high velocity will do the work. The torpedo boat alluded to is supposed to have had a weight of only thirty-eight tons; her velocity must have been great; we may suppose twenty knots, but even then that so frail a construction should do such great destruction was a revela-tion to me. A torpedo boat or a ram of only 350 tons, with the same speed, would have ten times the energy to deliver over to her victim. Then with only ten knots speed instead of twenty the measure of her energy would be one-fourth of the twenty-knot speed.

NO MEAN ADVERSARY. So we see that a construction of only 1,000 tons displacement built on the best lines for speed, and modeled above the water line to give the best results as to a minimum weight of armor and a maximum protection through lines favoring a deflection of projectiles thrown at her, would be no mean adversary for a battle ship, and that a fleet of them would be dreaded by most navy men more than an encounter with an equal number of battle ships, bearing in mind that the rams would naturally attack the battle ships at early dawn, or under whatever conditions. tions would most favor the attack, when the battle ships could use their guns to the least advantage. It does not follow that the dis-placement of the rams should be so small, nor is it a consequent that we should have no bat-tle ships, but I would say that the battle ships hereafter built could be advantageously n fied in design.

I read in the Post of June 26 as follows: r built could be advantageously modi "One result of the catastrophe has been to bring to the front numerous advocates of the bring to the front numerous advocates of the ram, pure and simple, as a weapon of offense, and attention has been called anew to a paper prepared on the subject by Admiral Ammen, the designer of a unique vessel of this type called the Katahdin, now being built at Bath, Me., for the navy. But the naval constructors do not attach much importance to this vessel, mainly because of the fact that by reason of the weight of her armor she will be too slow to catch up with most of the modern war vessels. They argue that most of the American naval vessels have ram bows, and would be quite as efficient as a specially designed ram. They also say that the efficiency of the ram may be easily overestimated, for of the ram may be easily overestimated, for actual experience in warfare has proven that it is exceedingly difficult, and in most cases imis exceedingly difficult, and in most cases impossible, to ram an antagonist that is fully aware of the purpose of the enemy, for the attack can generally be defeated by sharp maneuvering, while the vessel making the attempt must expose herself at her most vulnerable point to an almost irresistible concentrated fire of heavy game."

fire of heavy guns." presented. The calculations for speed by the bureau of construction and by two experts show that the Katahdin should have as much speed as any vessel in our navy of the same displacement and the same indicated horse power. We may hope that the speed of the vessel will soon be tried; also her facility for turning, which will probably greatly exceed of March 4, translated and published in Sea-board of Mav 4, presents a much more favor-able view of the ram, and does not sustain the idea that a fleet of battle ships could execute sharp maneuvers and avoid being rammed by a fleet of rams. Besides, as before stated, the attack should be made when the rams found the opportunity favorable.

In relation to ram bows on our naval vess I quote from "The Old Navy and the New:" critic of the ram proposed by me said that all battle ships had ram bows; he might as well have said that all men who carry swords are to

In the appendix of the report of the Secretary of the Navy of 1883 will be found a letter by me on coast defense; on pages 470-474 of "The Old Navy and the New" will be found a The translation in Seaboard of May 4 may serve to enlighten some naval constructors, to whom I would cite the significant fact that two of our yacht "cup defenders," the Pilgrim and the Jubilee, seem to have curved lines of keel quite like the ram, which seem to offer greater facility for turning than vessels of war with ram bows. It is found unhappily through many collisions of vessels that ram bows are not an essential, nor, in my belief, advantageous in destroying a vessel, and may prove a serious injury, as was the case with the Merrimac, and as may possibly be shown when the Camper-down is docked.

CONSTRUCTOR NIXON'S ERRORS In the New York Herald of the 27th Mr. Lewis Nixon, naval constructor of the Cramps, is quoted in relation to the sinking of the Victoria:
"Now, in regard to rams. It does not follow because the Victoria has been sunk that all that because the Victoria has been sunk that all that is necessary for us to have in order to resist foreign battle ships is a number of rams. Although the Victoria was sunk by a ram you must understand that it was a battle ship that carried that ram. The efficiency of a ram depends probably more upon her momentum than upon anything else. The Ammen ram, for instance, to have the same momentum that the Camperdown had when she struck the Victoria would have to have been going fifty knots an hour, because these rams are only 2,000 tons. an hour, because these rams are only 2,000 tons, while the battle ship is 10,000 tons."

It will be accepted as a fact that the efficiency of a ram depends upon her momentum. Were the Ammen ram with a weight of 2,000 tons in round numbers, which is one-fifth of tons in round numbers, which is one-fifth of the weight of the Camperdown, to strike a ves-sel under similar conditions and with the same speed, she would have one-fifth of the momen-tum or energy of the battle ship. If we as-sume the battle ship had a speed of ten knots and the Ammen ram had a speed of fifty knots the relative weights of the vessels do not bear out Mr. Nixon's assertion. The formula is brief: Weight of Camsertion. The formula is brief: Weight of Camperdown, 10,000 tons; square of 10 knotsspeed—100, which, multiplied by the weight of the Camperdown, gives 1,000,000 knot-tons. The ram weighing 2,000 tons, with an asserted velocity of 50 knots per hour, the square of which would be 2,500, multiplied by the weight of the ram, would be 5,000,000 of knot-tons, or five times the energy of the Campordown, if 10 knots be assumed as her speed on striking. It hnots be assumed as her speed on striking. It may be assumed that one-half of that speed, or even less, would probably have effected the loss of the Victoria, perhaps with less loss of

If Mr. Nixon is not satisfied with these figures I trust he will give the public his deductions in calculations. While the sinking of the Victoria is appalling and attracts universal attention and sympathy, as an object lesson it has not the significance of the damage done to the battle ship Nile off Malta through a torpedo boat run-ning into her, as published about April 23 last. Not referring to Mr. Nixon, I was told two years ago that a naval constructor of note said

I quote from page 473 of "The Old Navy and the New:" "When an enemy appears on a coast, a fleet of rams opposing armored ships has as much in its favor as regards opportunity as an attempt to supplement the defensive operations of a land force by the use of battle ships has of disadvantage, especially over a long line of coast. A fleet of rame in readiness to attack an armored fleet would not have long to wait; a moderately rough sea, a fresh breeze, with a bright moon or the early dawn would offer advantages of attack that would not exist were advantages of attack that would not exist were it to be made by battle ships. A good light is necessary to sight guns and very little to run into a vessel. The huge hulls would be plainly in sight from the rams a mile away and the latter would be invisible until quite near. They would have their steam at its best and the armored ships would have theirs as it might happen. Nor could the ships hoist out their toped boats with celerity and make use of them under such conditions.

"After a ram attack would come the opportunity for the effective use of an inferior numthat however well planned to secure great ber of battle ships and other vesuels acting as a reserve, capable of completing a victory and towing into port the disabled vessels of the enemy. With fleets of rams of great speed at various points, it would be a bold and imprudent enemy that would enter Long Island sound or one of our bays, with the ship canals constructed as proposed; speed and at the same time a maximum protecas a ram. A recent occurrence, as published, of torpedo boat No. 13 of the British navy running into the battle ship Nile and causing her forward compartment to fill with water, has verified the fact that an enormous weight is not necessary to destroy by ramping and from Puget sound to San Diego on the Pacific. When could they be completed? What would they cost and could they be as nume at any one point of attack as a con force of the enemy?" DAN'L Ammendale, Md., June 30, 1898.
